David de Olifard is said to have accompanied the retreat of David I. from Winchester in 1142. David I. certainly gave the companion of his journey the manors of Smallham and Crailing in Roxburghshire. David Olifard had the honor to be the first Justiciary of Lothian of which any record appears. In this important character he appeared during the year 1165; and he continued to act as justiciary for several years under William the Lion. When he died appears not, but he left five sons - David, William, Walter, Philip, and Falco, who all appeared in the chartularies during William's reign.

Note: the OLIPHANT / OLIFARD family extends back to the 9th century: When a noble Norwegian called Sir Donald (or Daniel) de Holifard or Olifard, arrived in Scotland with the Vikings, was taken prisoner by the Scottish monarch; and being a man of rank and distinction, was treated according to his quality and merit. A peace being eventually concluded, Sir Donald had liberty to return home ; but having contracted a friendship with several of the first families, he married, and settled in Scotland; and is said to have been the remote progenitor of all the Olifards or Oliphants in Scotland.
